Association for Publishing Education

The Association for Publishing Education brings together HE institutions that offer Publishing studies, and bodies and individuals that work with those institutions. We welcome new members: please email the Secretary for details.

The Association was founded in 1999 by Professor Alistair McCleery of Napier University and Dr Joan Burks of the London College of Communication. APE now boasts a membership that includes all UK Universities offering Publishing studies, as well as a growing body of professional and institutional partners, both in the UK and internationally.

We Seek To:

- Provide a common voice for the teaching of publishing in higher education; a forum for academic and professional concerns and for lobbying.
- Monitor accreditation schemes.
- Discuss education and curriculum development.
- Represent publishing education issues to employers and the higher education sector.
- Collect and share information on the teaching of publishing in higher education.
- Promote and support academic research in publishing education.
